CONKLING AT THE CAPITAL.

His Presence Effects no Change in the Situation.

THE ALBANY COUNTY GRANT CLUB PRESENTS ITS "DUTY."

Protests Against Reelection of Conkling and Platt Continue to Come In—The "Times" Shows the Weakness of the Regularity Plea—Etc., Etc.

[SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.]

ALBANY, May 25.—The following letter was sent to Senator McCarty this evening:

ALBANY, May 24.

Hon. D. McCarty, chairman of the republican senate caucus committee: Dear Sir—I beg to call your attention to my letter of yesterday inviting your committee to unite in a joint call for a caucus of republican members of the legislature. The same letter was delivered yesterday to another member making a majority thereof. Your courteous reply was received last evening and I waited all day in the hope that you would further advise me of the proposed action of your committee. We are required by law to vote on Tuesday next, and as Monday is Decoration Day it may be inferred that no caucus will be held on that day. Thursday evening therefore seems to be the latest time to which caucus can be postponed. Asking your early attention to the exigencies of the occasion, I beg to add that I am present at parlor G of the Delevan and would be happy to meet you for consultation. Very truly yours,

G. H. SHARPE.

McCarthy replied to Speaker Sharpe that he would call a meeting of the caucus committee at the earliest possible moment.

Address from the Grant Club of Albany County, N. Y.

Senator Conkling held a levee all evening at the Delevan House. The room was constantly crowded. He shook hands with everybody presenting himself, and to each said a pleasant word. During the evening the Grant Club of the city and county entered the room in a body and presented the ex-senator the following address:

The Grant club, which has the largest membership of any political organization in the county of Albany, and whose guiding principles have been fidelity to party organization and loyal support of the regular nominations of the republican party, in the present political excitement call your attention to several facts which seem to point the path of duty and honor to every republican who believes in the great principles of the party, and desires to see its organization and success perpetual. No one can forget the gloom and darkness which settled like a nightmare upon the party when James G. Blaine, humbled and defeated in his own state, was powerless to give one gleam of hope, one ray of light. The great leaders, who could rally the party to battle, had been insulted, maligned and outraged. The masses were sullen, dissatisfied and almost hopeless. Then it was that U. S. Grant and Roscoe Conkling, casting aside indignities and insults which had been heaped upon them, guided only by party organization and love for the grand old party which had saved the life of the nation, entered the conflict and came to the rescue of the country. Hope took the place of despondency from one end of the nation to the other. The broken ranks closed up and the party hosts with delight responded to the clarion calls of the leader in whom they had confidence. In Indiana and Ohio the tide of battle turned. Who among you can forget the service of Grant and Conkling in the memorable contest in those states, or can you forget the timely and invaluable service of that shrewd, able and tireless political leader of our own state, Senator Thomas C. Platt, in the contest of Indiana? From out of darkness came light. Victory was snatched out of the jaws of defeat, and the flag which trailed in the dust in Maine rose resplendent in victory in Indiana, and James A. Garfield was saved the possible mortification of defeat in his state of Ohio. The republicans of New York held the post of honor and danger. If New York was lost all was lost. Then began the most brilliant and successful canvass ever waged in the annals of the state. Who were your leaders then? Who marshaled your hosts and directed your columns which marched on to victory? Grant, Conkling, Arthur, Cornell and Platt rendered service then which should even make the republican party their debtor. The plaudits of the entire republican press were deservedly and freely showered upon those great leaders who had rendered victory possible in the state of New York.

Conkling received the paper saying that he would not be able to read it at present. The chairman of the club informed him that he could read it at his leisure; that no response was expected. He thanked the chairman and then the club filed before him, when he shook the hand of each member. There were about 500 people in the streets adjacent to the hotel expecting a serenade and speech from Conkling, but he had declined the honor of a serenade before he came and would not change his determination.

Curley, a member of the assembly from Cortland Co., received from his home, town of Cuyler, signed by all but four republicans to whom it was presented, asking him to sustain or favor the return of Conkling and Platt.

Remonstrances Presented to the Senate.

ALBANY, May 25.—In the senate Wagner presented remonstrances from republicans of several towns against the return of Conkling and Platt. Sessions, Lynde and Robertson presented similar remonstrances.

Oswego Endorses Garfield.

OSWEGO, May 25.—Public meetings have been held endorsing Garfield and opposing Platt and Conkling.

Another Protest.

ALBION, N. Y., May 25.—The Lincoln Club this evening adopted resolutions supporting the administration, and petitioned their representative in the legislature to oppose the re-election of Conkling and Platt.

A Dismal Failure.

NEW YORK, May 25.—Tribune editorial: Conkling's entry at the state capital was a very tame affair, even with the vice president at his heels. There were no scenic effects, no magnetic thrills of enthusiasm at the hotel exchange which he had selected as his telephone exchange. The welcome was not what his sanguine admirers expected it would be. The senator's personal canvass opened immediately. Cornell was one of his earliest callers, being greeted with great effusiveness. As politicians began to swarm in the lobbies the swagger increased, but the demonstration as a whole was a dismal failure. One zealous friend after another in the legislature mustered courage to tell him the cold naked truth that their constituents would not re-elect them if they voted for the return of senators who have betrayed their trusts and made war upon the republican president without cause. Conkling knows to-day, if he did not know yesterday, that he cannot win without democratic votes.

The Times on Conkling.

NEW YORK, May 25.—Times editorial: Conkling's criticism of the president's action in making a vacancy to reward a personal adherent, lost half its force from the fact that it would have done precisely what Conkling would have done under similar circumstances. When the ex-senator begins to crack the party whip at Albany, and to appeal to the decision of the caucus as a special divinely ordained instrument for the expression of party will, he finds again that he has furnished his enemies with weapons of defense out of his own quiver. Is a caucus of the U. S. senate a less sacred institution than a caucus of the New York legislature? And if not, why does Conkling defy the one and strain his political future on the vote of the other? A revolt against caucus dictation at Washington ought surely to have some tolerance for those who refuse to bow to the tyranny of caucus at Albany. If the party can not be held together without "regularity" in its methods at the state capital, what's to become of it if national representatives cast contempt upon every known party precedent? Shall "regularity" be invoked to elect a pair of political bushwhackers who protest against being ranked as "Garfield republicans," but have as yet failed to announce under what banner they propose to serve out their respective terms?

A Dignified Course.

The president has but one letter from Conkling asking that his wishes be considered in making appointments for New York, but many favors have been asked verbally. Garfield will not answer the senator's strictures, nor will he permit Conkling's letter to be copied for publication.

Blaine's Visit to New York.

Several influential gentlemen visited the White House and made a protest against Blaine's going to New York with the apparent design of entering the senatorial fight. Garfield expressed surprise to learn that Blaine was absent.

Conkling Well Sketched.

[New York Sun.]

Mr. Conkling is one of the ablest men in the senate. He has talents of a high order, which if wisely and conscientiously used would have rendered … in the senate in its best days. But his conception of the dignity of the office is apparently as low as that of Kellogg or of Don Cameron. His statesmanship consists mainly in devices for strengthening the machine; his duties, in providing offices for political dependents.

Clerk of Conkling's Committee.

[Chicago Times.]

If Garfield should lose in this fight, the duties of the president of the United States might be made to devolve on the clerk to the senate committee on commerce. The duties would then be merely perfunctory, and it would not be important to the country to know who was the clerk to the committee. This progress in the evolution of the constitution might give us, in exchange for the quadrennial crisis—what?

PACIFIC COAST NEWS.

CALIFORNIA.

Southern Pacific Schemes.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 25.—The Daily Stock Exchange prints from an official of the Southern Pacific railroad, who is authorized by President Crocker to make it public, that Chief Engineer … with a party of surveyors, will leave … Yuma in a day or two to survey a line of road from that point to Point Isabel, at the head of the gulf of California. The terminus of the road will be at deep water in the gulf, where wharves and warehouses are to be built and other shipping facilities established. When the road is ready for business a line of fast steamers will be placed on the gulf to run to Guaymas, Mazatlan and other Mexican ports. The road is expected to be in complete running order by the first of October next.

Attempt at Robbery.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 25.—A very bold attempt this afternoon to rob the U. S. treasury on Commercial street was made by a Chinaman. The attempt was made on a moderate scale, the Chinaman contenting himself with thrusting his arm through a wicket and grabbing three or four rolls of twenty-five cent pieces. He was seen by a bystander who captured him at the door. The thief struggled violently to escape, and when he saw that he could not he feigned insanity.

Sad Accident.

… May 25.—This evening two children, Daniel Meacham, a boy of ten, and his sister aged six years, were playing with a pistol which went off accidentally, the ball wounding the boy in the hand and penetrating the sister's head, making a mortal wound.

Against Chinese Laborers.

BODIE, May 24.—Considerable excitement has been aroused here in regard to the employment of Chinese on railroad lines. The Mono Lake Company has put a few Chinamen at work at the further end of the line, and have advertised for 200 white laborers at $1 25 per day and board at the place of work here. A mass meeting was held to-night at which a resolution was adopted that no Chinaman should be employed in Mono county. A meeting of the miners' union is being held to-night to consider the matter. At 10 o'clock no result was arrived at. The chances are that if any interference is indulged in the railroad will be abandoned.

NEVADA.

Murder at Eureka.

EUREKA, May 25.—This afternoon a shooting affray occurred at Breonenkamp & Begle's City brewery on Lower Main street, in which Adolph Herve shot and killed a German named Max Frietschel at about 5 o'clock, while Frietschel was at work at a soda factory. Herve came up to the front door and fired a shot at him. Frietschel ran out of the factory after Herve. The two men disappeared around the corner of the brewery, when another shot was heard, and a moment after the former came running back around the corner. Herve in the lead and Frietschel shouting to a man named Therient to stop him. When opposite the factory door Frietschel fell dead. Herve started up the canyon towards Pinto and secured a horse. Officers at this writing are in hot pursuit.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Railroad News from Walla Walla.

WALLA WALLA, May 25.—The first broad gauge railroad train arrived at and left this city this evening. Its advent was watched by a large number of people.

Track laying on the Dayton branch will commence to-morrow. The track will be standard gauge and of steel rails. Several miles of the light iron, one locomotive and ten flat cars have been sold to the Mill Creek Flume and Manufacturing Co. and will be used to construct and operate a railroad from Walla Walla up Mill creek to the … flume. This road will be built at once.

Washington Territory.

John A. Smart, who had resided at Newcastle for the past eight years, died at the home of his brother of that place a few days since of … pneumonia.

The machinery will be taken from the old steamer Comet and put into the new hull, recently built for the White river trade. The former craft was sold a few days since for $500.

The first of the vessels built by the Hall Bros. at Port Blakely will be launched on or about the first of June. It will be a three-masted schooner of about 500 tons measurement.

The coal bunker capacity at Newcastle is to be doubled immediately, so that a large stock can be kept on hand there. … the hauling to town.

Work on the new tug boat being built by Mr. … at North Seattle, is progressing rapidly. The frames are all out and partly up. The contractors expect to have her finished some time before the date specified in the contract.

A recent careful examination of the accounts of the late sheriff of Cowlitz county discloses the unpleasant fact that he is a defaulter to the amount of some $1700. It cost the county $400 for an expert to find the exact amount. His bondsmen are …

A Lake Washington farmer while walking leisurely along the road recently, came upon a black bear that in his judgment would tip the scales above 600 pounds. The monster fairly shook the ground as it galloped away. This bear has been seen in that community often before, but he has thus far escaped the rifle.

James Daly, of Lewis river, was taken to Vancouver last Sunday evening and placed in the county jail on a commitment made by Justice Evans. Daly is charged with having, on the 15th of May, maliciously fired a shotgun at one Robt Walsh, thereby wounding him in the head. It seems that no one was present when the trouble occurred.

No money has been or is likely to be made by traders on Neah bay buying sealskins this season. But few have been taken, although the catch for the remainder of the season is likely to be good. The season lasts usually about four or five weeks longer. The seals have been kept comparatively near shore by reason of the remarkably heavy weather of the spring.

Some time since Charles Hanson bought out all the interest held by John W. Ackerson in the Tacoma mills and all the ship and steam vessels owned by the firm of Hanson, Ackerson & Co. Mr. Hanson has in contemplation very material improvements. New boilers and new machinery will be placed in position, and within the next 60 or 90 days Tacoma mills will be turning out from 100,000 to 125,000 feet of superior lumber daily. As at present conducted, the mills are doing an enormous amount of work. These contemplated and expensive improvements will make them second to none in the country.

THE GIRAFFE AND THE SHOWMAN.

An Apologue with a Moral for Bossism.

[From the New York Tribune.]

The Giraffe in one of the Biggest Shows on Earth got very angry because he was not consulted in the Choice of Ring Masters, as he said he was entitled to be what he called "The Courtesy of the Show." The Trick Mules sympathized with him. Said the Giraffe to the Showman: "What, I would like to inquire, would have become of this Circus if I and the Trick Mules had abandoned it at Chicago, as we might have done?"

And the Showman answered: "Ask rather what would have become of you and the Trick Mules. There's no Show travelling but has all the Giraffes it can take care of and as for Trick Mules, they're a drug in the market. I sold off a lot last winter myself for $3 apiece to the Street Cleaners."

Then the Trick Mules, shocked at the Showman's audacity, sat around the Giraffe on their haunches and wondered whether after such language that Lofty Animal would let the Show go on. But the Lofty Animal made no sign.

At length the showman said: "Look here, Gif! You're the most expensive Animal in this Collection. You're so high between joints that you have to have Quarters specially designed for you, and you require such delicate Diet and careful Attendance that the Whole Show has to be run to suit your Whims. You're not useful and you're not dangerous, and you're not much of a Novelty now. I got several stuffed Giraffes that would answer my Purpose as well, and be a great deal cheaper. If you and the Trick Mules want to set up a Side Show by yourselves go ahead, but if you're going to stay here understand that this is a Great Moral Show and I'm running it myself."

Then an animal alone in a corner by himself broke in with the remark: "If this ever becomes a genuine Moral Show it will be because my advice is followed. I'm glad to see the Giraffe and the Trick Mules snubbed, but it is true that the new Rules of the Show were violated in the appointment of the Ring Master. I ought to have been consulted in that as in all other matters."

Even the angry Giraffe laughed at that, and the Showman, turning toward the Solitary Brute with just a shade of impatience in his tone, said: "Oh, you're an Ass!"

The Policy of Fighting Back.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Mr. George William Curtis thinks the president has made a mistake. Mr. Curtis approved of Robertson's appointment when it was made, but he thinks the president erred in forcing the senate either to accept or reject it. In other words he thinks the president ought to have remained inactive and allowed Mr. Conkling to smother the nomination. There can be no doubt of Mr. Curtis's sincerity, but it may be said, with all deference to his judgment, that his method of opposing Senator Conkling has not been a success. As a leader of the anti-Conkling republicans in this state Mr. Curtis has for several years pursued a plan which he now thinks the president ought to have followed. That is to oppose Mr. Conkling until he begins to fight, and then retire with great dignity and allow him to have his own way. This method has been eminently satisfactory to Conkling. If the president had followed it there would be no trouble at Washington now. But the president chose a different plan, and the country applauds his choice. The only way to put a stop to Conkling's bossism is to fight back whenever he fights. There is a clearly defined opinion abroad that this is the best way to meet him now.

Dastardly Assault.

NEW YORK, May 25.—Mrs. Fanny Mordaunt, wife of Frank Mordaunt (actor), residing in Brooklyn, was the victim of a dastardly assault last night, being nearly blinded with red pepper. The lady was in terrible agony all night, but is better this morning. Some person came to the rear door of her residence at 12 o'clock, and knocked loudly. Mrs. Mordaunt finally went out of the front door to look for a police, when a man, who had been crouching near the fence, rose suddenly and threw a handful of pepper in her face, a large portion of which went into her eyes. The fellow then fled. The police were unable to find any person in the neighborhood whose description corresponded with his appearance but Sergeant James Campbell of the twelfth precinct, who was off duty at the time. It appears that Sergeant Campbell had been on intimate terms with Mrs. Mordaunt for three years, until she asserted that he insulted her. This terminated their friendship. He said that he had spent the evening in a lager beer saloon, and had not been to Mrs. Mordaunt's house. This story, as also several others he told, were proven false and he was locked up.

WASHINGTON CITY.

Resignation of Land Commissioner Williamson.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Gen. J. A. Williamson, commissioner of the general land office to-day tendered the secretary of the interior his resignation, which was promptly accepted. Gen. Williamson states that this is voluntary. He has had it in contemplation some time. The position he is going to is the letter is that of general land commissioner for the Atlantic & Pacific railway on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe branch of that road. His letter:

Hon. S. J. Kirkwood, Secretary of the Interior—Sir: I have the honor to tender you, and through you to the president, my resignation as commissioner of the general land office, to take effect June 1st. My reason for resigning is that I have secured employment at a salary much greater than paid me as commissioner. The severance of my official relations with you causes sincere regret, not only on account of your recent kindly acts and expressions, but more on account of the past, when you followed with interest my career in the army and raised me up from the lowest to the highest rank in your power to bestow as governor of our state. With sincere wish and belief that your administration of the great office you hold will be in all respects successful, I am with profound respect and esteem sincerely your friend,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,

Commissioner General Land Office.

The secretary's reply was most kindly in tone and expressive of the utmost regret at the resignation.

It is reported that U. S. Marshal Dudley, of Indiana, will be appointed land commissioner.

Bonds En Route.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Secretary Windom decides that he will receive all fives for renewal at 3½ which started yesterday. This is considered just, although only $250,000 five were wanted. There may be some en route from San Francisco, Oregon or New Orleans that will not arrive for some days, and yet under the secretary's decision they will be stamped and continued when they come to hand, provided they show evidences of having been sent by mail or express on the day specified.

A Spirited Debate in the House of Commons.

LONDON, May 25.—In the House of Commons today O'Donnell, home ruler member for Dungarvan, speaking in support of the resolution on the arrest of Father Sheehy and Dillon, made a bitter attack on Forster, chief secretary for Ireland. He said the arrest of Father Sheehy caused even a stronger feeling than if Archbishop Croke had been arrested. It was perhaps deemed easier to arrest a priest than an archbishop, but though the act was cowardly it was by no means wise. He proceeded to attack the government for assisting in evicting poverty-stricken people, and stigmatized the recent circular urging the police to greater vigilance as a direct incitement to … [illegible]

Forster said he refused to dwell upon O'Donnell's assertions because they were untenable. He had hitherto refrained from entering upon particulars of Dillon's arrest because he feared it might endanger the safety and even lives of particular individuals. He then proceeded to quote from the incendiary speeches of Dillon and Father Sheehy.

Forster admitted that the government had proclaimed Dillon in order to be able to arrest … They could not be said to arrest people for … [illegible] … saw a conspiracy to commit robbery by armed resistance to law, and they would not allow the conspiracy to succeed, even though the persons to be robbed were landlords. The instructions issued by this office relative to the selection of swamp or overflowed lands in your state differ in no material point from those in force in all the states where they have elected to make such selections by their own agents.

The object had in view by this office in sending an agent to Oregon was to verify the report furnished by the state, and all the effort was to extend to determining a large class of claimants, and also between those claiming under the pre-emption and homestead laws and grants by the state, as the claimants under it.

An application very similar to the above was recently presented by the state of Illinois.

The state claimed indemnity upon certain swamp land under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1855, as extended by act of March 3, 1857, which had been selected by the claimants, but as the state must furnish proof as to the character of the land it was not necessary to make … [illegible]

The case having gone to the department on appeal, the secretary of the interior June …, 1880, instructed this office as follows: "You should require that these applications should specify the tracts for which indemnity is claimed and the … whether such lands were … swamp … [illegible] … for cultivation."

If, in the opinion of the department it is necessary to have proof of the character of the land as the basis for an indemnity claim, where subsequent proof, before a special agent, from this office must be taken, it would seem still more important that such proof should be furnished by the state when no such proof as is required in indemnity cases is to follow.

The list furnished Gen. Lakeny embraced all the land to which the state of Oregon had made claim under the swamp grant, but it was not contemplated by this office that his examination of the same would relieve the state … [illegible] … showing the land in accordance with the instructions above quoted. The swamp grant to the state of Oregon having been a grant [illegible] … by the department, April 8, 1880, in the case of the state of Oregon vs. the United States, it is necessary to have proof going to show the character of the land at the date of … [illegible]

The complicated condition of the swamp grant in Oregon grew largely out of the different constructions placed by the department … upon the proviso to the first section and the second section of the act of March 12, 1860, extending the swamp grant to your state.

These differences have been determined by departmental decisions of April 15 and June 4, 1880, and there seems to be no obstacle now in the way of a speedy adjustment of the grant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. WILLIAMSON, Commissioner.

THE BEST BIOGRAPHICAL POLICY.

[From the New York Times.]

Honesty in some cases … to be a very bad policy. There was Mr. Forster, who wrote a three-volume biography of his friend Dickens and told the truth about him. There … of 1,… pages … who admired Dickens and those … who did not. … popular opinion of Dickens had previously been … was conceded that he … flashy waistcoats … too much stress upon … means of grace in connection with the Christmas season. Still, it was generally believed that he was a genial, warm-hearted man, full of sympathy with the poor and oppressed, and always quick to appreciate what was pure and noble. Mr. Forster made up his biography chiefly of extracts from Dickens's letters, thereby showing the great novelist as he really was. The world thus discovered that Dickens was a supreme egotist, a man densely ignorant of everything but his own writings, and a money maker whose chief aim in life was to get as much money as possible out of his publishers and out of the people who flocked to hear him read. The old ideal of Dickens, the warm-hearted and noble man, was totally shattered. In its place Mr. Forster gave us a selfish, unfeeling egotist, who … ridiculing his father and mother and deserted his wife because he imagined that he had outgrown her. Nobody pretends to doubt that Forster's biography was true, but everybody abuses him for having written it. There is a vague feeling that somehow the biographer was responsible for the meannesses and littlenesses of Dickens's character, and our dislike of Dickens involves his well meaning and honest friend. Now, had Mr. Forster suppressed every line of Dickens's letters which exhibited him in an unfavorable light, and had he given us a portrait of the purely imaginary Dickens, we should all have called him a faithful and excellent biographer and extended to him a part of our admiration for the noble-hearted man who did so much … vague and indefinite … his humanitarian novels.

It is now Mr. Froude's turn to experience the effects of telling the truth about a dead man, or rather of letting the dead man tell the truth about himself. Mr. Carlyle was disliked for many reasons by many people, but there was up to the time of his death an almost unanimous belief that he was a perfectly sincere man who had an intense hatred of everything that was mean, and an intense love of whatever was true and honest. To Mr. Froude Carlyle committed the task of publishing the "Reminiscences," and … is really Carlyle's autobiography. In this book Carlyle … nearly every literary man with whom he had ever come in contact. To scarcely a single one of his contemporaries did he concede any genius or ability, while … in an … and brutal manner. As Carlyle had during his lifetime written letters to the same people in which he dealt out to them what can fairly be called flattery, it is difficult since the publication of his "Reminiscences" to believe that he was the … hater of insincerity and dishonesty that he had always professed to be. He exhibited himself to us a man of … self-esteem, filled with … and by no means free from … of envy. The ideal Carlyle is as dead as the ideal Dickens and to the … [illegible]

With the same … fairness which was shown to the case of Dickens' biography the public has turned upon Mr. Froude and is … him with … [illegible] … publication of Carlyle's "Reminiscences" was a brutal outrage … and that …

… [illegible] … Mr. Froude has … that it was … to the … He … [illegible] … an awful warning to … editors of dead men's autobiographies … of honesty and truthfulness.

We do these things much better on this side of the water. When the late Jared Sparks undertook to write the life and publish the letters of Washington he took great care not to alter in any way the popular idea of Washington. He abstained from publishing every letter which would seem in the least out of keeping with the … and faultless Washington of popular mythology, and he sternly suppressed every line which would convey the impression that Washington was a man of like passions with other men. The result was that Sparks won a great reputation as an able and judicious biographer, and that his portrait of Washington will be accepted throughout the ages as the true portrait of the father of his country.

This is what Mr. Froude should have done. He should have suppressed every impolite word that Carlyle had written concerning any of his contemporaries. He should have cut out every line that could in any way conflict with the theory of Carlyle's wonderful sincerity, honesty and general nobility of character. Had he done this the critics would have exclaimed how fortunate it was that Mr. Carlyle had given his "Reminiscences" for publication to so competent a man, and how thoroughly worthy Mr. Froude was of the confidence and friendship of the great man. All Mr. Froude had to do was to be dishonest, to mutilate Carlyle's manuscript and to make the author exhibit himself in a false light. That he did not do this is sufficiently evident, and he has been … for not knowing that dishonesty is the biographer's best policy.

A GROWING SENTIMENT.

The growth of a wholesome public sentiment on the question of political duty in the United States is one of the most promising signs of the times. While the masses of the people on whose action depends the conservation of the true principles of a republican form of government, are often moved by party feeling to measures that seem to the non-progressive subjects of the old world monarchies as only the results of passion or the display of a revolutionary spirit, there is among them always a time of sober second thought; and though political excitement and party feeling may seem for a time to carry men away from the path of propriety and even of safety, they are not likely to be kept up to such an abnormal heat for any great length of time. Hence we find, more especially that during the last four or five years, beyond the few weeks in which some political contest has been going on, when the professional politicians and office-seekers were trying to agitate the people upon the question of who should hold the offices, there has been everywhere among the masses a desire to allow political matters to rest. In so far as the greatest interest which the people have taken in the distribution of the offices, it has been largely more in favor of distributing them among honest men—men of known ability and integrity—than among party favorites and place hunters. No man has a better opportunity to know public sentiment on these questions than the observing journalist. While he may often, either from personal feelings or from a pure desire to change the current of a sentiment that he deems running in a wrong direction, oppose the drift of public opinion, he feels it instinctively when his course meets with public approval or otherwise. The independent journalist, however, does not allow this experience to deter him from exerting whatever influence he may have in leading public sentiment into that line to which he is sure it must come upon this valuable sober second thought.

In political campaigns there is often much said and done that after consideration would not endorse; and men whose sole recommendation for preferment is their party zeal, try to keep up this state of political excitement constantly and to keep the nation in a state of perpetual fear that the nation is going to the dogs, in order that the people may, in looking at more important matters, overlook their own demerits and crimes. The man who is usually loudest and most clamorous for a strict adherence to party when no real party question is involved is generally a man who must be boosted into position with a "whoop" and a "hurrah," or by the machinery of a caucus manipulated by some boss in political trickery, or who must forever remain in private life, having no qualification that the people in their calmer moments would approve. Because the people who made the republican party, and who believed in and cherished its principles, for years, in some cases, yielded obedience to the dictates of unworthy leaders, rather than incur the greater evil of allowing the government to fall back into the hands of a party that sought its destruction, they will not submit to dictation now to save some member of the party whose official head is in danger, or some office seeker's hope is about being blasted. Pennsylvania, one of the worst boss ridden states in the union, exhibited an illustration of the growth of this wholesome sentiment last fall, when a number of her republican legislators stood up boldly day after day and defied the caucus, voted against the caucus nominee and finally compelled his withdrawal from the contest for the senatorship. Their action was altogether irregular as partisans, but the people approved it, and the whole "machine" power was not able to read the recalcitrants out of the party. Some of the delegates to the Chicago convention from New York refused to follow the dictates of the bosses and the people of the Empire state, who had four years before given the democratic candidate 28,000 majority, endorsed the action of their representatives at Chicago by giving Garfield 20,000. Everywhere lately there has been a most decided difference made, whenever the opportunity has been presented between genuine party fealty, fealty to principles, and the ability to manipulate primaries, conventions and caucuses. This last named kind of ability is now greatly in excess of the demand, while honest partisan service, and especially the honest performance of official duty, are still important qualifications in aspirants for places of trust before the people. The capacity to run a primary or to manage a back office caucus, is no longer considered a requisite in a good officer, nor a qualification that will atone for the absence of the more sterling qualities of honesty and fair dealing.

JEFFERSON DAVIS' BOOK.

Carlyle in his "Reminiscences," wrote sneeringly of "that nigger agony of America which they call their civil war." The sections of the book by Jefferson Davis—soon to be published—which have appeared in the newspapers, are stupid enough to have been written from the Carlylean standpoint of blear-eyed moral vision and dyspeptic pessimism. It is the history of a period written in the fogs that surrounded it from a southern point of view twenty years ago, and is therefore little else than a wail over the destruction of state sovereignty and the downfall of slavery. With Jefferson Davis it is a never-failing source of regret and lamentation that the confederacy did not succeed. Recently in a speech dedicating a statue of Stonewall Jackson, he declared that "the confederacy ought to have succeeded." Yet it is now apparent to all clear minds even in the south that its success would have been a calamity. The confederacy, it will not be forgotten, took for its corner-stone the institution of chattel slavery. When it fell that stone fell with the rest, and well for the south was it that it did so, for, had it been permitted to remain, the south would still be the land of sloth and inaction. It was slavery that made labor ignoble and action degrading. It was slavery that made the southern white men idle and thriftless. Among other things which the north did for the redemption of the southern states in destroying the confederacy was the destruction of slavery. Had it not done so those states would have still remained strangers to business activity and prosperity. Now labor is respectable, enterprise is the fashion, and prosperity, such as the south never knew, and never could have known if the confederacy had prevailed, is the result. There was scarcely a manufactory in the south prior to the war, its railroads were few and badly operated, its mineral wealth was undeveloped, and even its agricultural resources were drawn upon in only the idlest manner. Now, everything is changed. The last year's crop of cotton, sugar and tobacco was large beyond all precedent; its mineral wealth is being rapidly and generally developed; factories in great numbers are in operation, and many more are building; the mileage of railroads has increased enormously, and the condition of the entire southern railroad system has been greatly improved, and southern ports, which, before the war, were without foreign commerce of any value, are now competing with New York and Philadelphia. These great and prosperous changes would never have been effected if the confederacy had not been defeated. Slavery was as the black rot, which ate out the vitality of the south, and its perpetuation under the confederacy would have kept the south always poor. The best thing that could have happened to the south did happen to it when the confederacy was swept out of existence, and the south itself will so declare, in contradiction of the declaration of Jefferson Davis. He says it was not the John Brown raid; not the passage of "the personal liberty law;" not the circulation of incendiary documents; not the operation of [illegible] unjust and unequal [illegible] secession, but [illegible] states struggle [illegible] of equality in the [illegible] the ruinous legislation [illegible] their people culminating [illegible] from the territories the common property of the states as well as [illegible] compact to promote the [illegible] that left the south [illegible] under the circumstances [illegible] was right and wise. Fortunately southern men who think thus are growing scarce, and in the next generation probably not one can be found. Few indeed are now so blind as not to know that slavery could not possibly have been maintained against the moral sense of mankind, no matter what the result of the conflict of arms to which the south appealed.

A HARD LESSON.

One of the hardest lessons humanity has had to learn is the lesson of its own insignificance. Man is fond of believing that the universe was made for him, and theology in past ages has ministered to this belief by encouraging what is known as the anthropocentric theory, that is, the theory which assumes that man is the centre or ultimate end of all things. Such theory of the importance of man has been applied not only to the earth, but to the entire system of the universe. Man has thus striven to honor his own intelligence and the higher intelligence that created him; and as the idea accords with some of his highest natural aspirations and desires, it is not wonderful that both scholarship and religion were so long insensible to evidences of the fact that there are other worlds than ours, and that the earth is only one among millions of worlds and neither in magnitude nor anything else comparable with thousands of others greater, grander and more glorious. Superstition and dogmatism contributed to swell the vanity of humanity. Science, learning and a truer religion tend to increase its humility. Every new discovery publishes its inconsequence. We have learned that even our own little world was not made specially for us. Other forms of intelligence may have inhabited it ages ago, and we are probably but a link in the chain of sentient beings whose origin and whose end are incomprehensible. It is not difficult to conceive how all life upon our globe might be annihilated, and no one left to read the history of the cataclysm to the next race. Events like the recent famine in India, by which multitudes perished or the earthquake at Scio which nearly destroyed a whole population, suggest vividly the helplessness and insignificance of man. Such awful catastrophes have not been uncommon in the world's history, and there is no assurance that they will not continue and increase in destructiveness to human life and hopes. Science makes it clear that one day the earth will be cold, dead and incapable of sustaining life as the moon. Where then will be the pride of man for whom all things were made? Emerson says that the study of astronomy is specially adapted to lift men above the sordid things of earth and the evanescent cares and troubles, loves and hates, of common life. A star disappears, and a world is lost. Another sad daily flames into meteoric brightness and dies into darkness, and a world is burned. On our globe proofs enough have been furnished of the ever-present activity and ruthless impartiality of forces before which all human calculations go down like the insect's nest before the avalanche. Science from day to day deepens and widens the meaning of the words: "What is man that thou are mindful of him?"

"CITIZENS' CALL."

Yesterday the "citizens' call" which appears to-day in our local columns, was in circulation through the city, and received hundreds of signatures. It will be further circulated to-day and to-morrow. Nine-tenths of all to whom it has been presented so far have signed it without hesitation. The movement is plainly in accord with popular sentiment. On all sides it receives expressions of approval. The city wants a business administration and a responsible one, not an administration of partisan chicane and jobbery under the cover of "party regularity." Mention of party names in municipal administration is an impertinence. No principle or measure of any political party is at issue. It is simply a question whether we shall have capable, responsible and thoroughly honest administration of the city's affairs, or allow all these interests to become merchandise for the fomentors and conductors of the "regular" system of municipal traffic to revel in. There are indications that a large majority of our citizens see it in this light, and that they will join in making a citizens' ticket, without regard to party affiliations, and then in electing it.

While under the administration of President Hayes, Secretaries McCrary and Ramsey were quite satisfied to maintain the dignity of the war ministry and to put the duties and authority of the position into the hands of the senior officer of the army, Gen. Sherman was a man of function and of importance. But Secretary Lincoln proposes to be personally the manager of the army, and Sherman finds himself without occupation or power. While nominally the highest officer in the service he has less actual authority than Lieut. Gen. Sheridan, the next in rank, and during the past two months has been made to feel most bitterly that he is "an old man" and that his day has passed. This is most humiliating to the hero of so many battles, and it is not viewed with pleasure by the men who marched to the sea under the brave old general, nor by the people of the nation who honor him as a soldier and love him as a man. The present embarrassments will probably result in the retirement of General Sherman.

Nothing could exceed the absurdity of the assertion made by the adherents of the boss system that President Garfield is trying to "punish" those who stood up for Grant at Chicago. He is simply letting the bosses know that he is president and that he declines to accept the position of a subordinate functionary to carry out their orders. It is not in his nature to make a fight or seek revenge. His whole career shows a disposition inclining to timidity rather than to aggression. But when bossism calls upon him to abdicate that he will not do.

From the claim made by Conkling and echoed by the Grant club at Albany the country learns that Garfield was elected by the firm of Conkling & Grant. The people, it appears, had no part in it. It is very kind of a couple of men who carry several millions of votes in their pockets to come to the rescue of the country at a critical time and put the votes where they will do the most good.

The presidency is not to be a tender to the senate chamber. Nor is the presidential office to be an instrument through which individual senators from each state may carry on a game of plunder, robbery and spoils. This is the significance of the protest against Conkling and the group of spoilsmen.

The violent attacks on President Garfield in the New York Herald recall the fact to many eastern journals that John Russell Young has not yet received the foreign mission for which Grant recommended him.

The lady was standing on a step-ladder, when it slipped and threw her to the floor. A surgeon was summoned, who dressed the wound and rendered the lady as comfortable as possible.

This gives all an opportunity to see the military parade and impressive services at the post.

Valuable Purchase.—Mayor D. P. Thompson recently bought of Mr. L. M. No [illegible] in Columbia.—The Astorian says: "The run of fish continues so slack that some of the canneries are waiting for something to turn up, some are predicting a big run at the close of the season; some want to shut up shop." [illegible] the advance in the price yesterday to 75 cents a fish.

The Steamers.—The steamer Columbia arrived yesterday at San Francisco from Portland. The steamer Oregon, which sailed from San Francisco Monday afternoon at 4:30, had not reported off the Columbia bar last evening up to the hour the telegraph office closed at Astoria.

Runaway.—On Sunday, while Plympton Kelly and his wife were out driving, beyond East Portland, in their two-horse hack, the neckyoke broke, just as the team started down a hill. Before the horses ran far Mrs. Kelly was thrown to the ground, sustaining very severe injuries.

New Dock.—Mr. C. H. Lewis has commenced construction of a dock immediately below Greenwich wharf, three hundred and twenty-five feet long. It will be finished within two months and cost nearly $20,000.

O. R. & N. RAILROAD NOTES.

[Dalles Times.]

Engine No. 5, while returning to this city last Saturday night, struck a sand drift and was ditched. She was brought into town last night, with her cab completely demolished, the tank stove in and sundry other damages. The greatest wonder is that the engineer and fireman escaped without injury.

The barge Hercules took down to the Cascades six flat cars Sunday morning, to be used on the line of the new railroad being laid on the Oregon side. These will be used to transport ties and track material to the end of the grade, where the track layers are at work. The roadbed has been graded some six or seven miles, and the work is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible.

The mechanics at the car shop were busy at work last week, filling an order for ten stock cars. These are manufactured on an improved pattern, under the personal supervision of Mr. C. A. Phipps, the foreman in that department. Mr. Phipps is a thorough mechanic, and understands car building perfectly. There are already six of these turned out on the track, and the order will be filled in a day or two. These cars are pronounced equal if not superior to any on the U. P. or C. P. roads.

RELIGIOUS NOTES.

[Sentinel.]

On next Sunday and until further notice, vespers at the Cathedral on Sunday evenings will begin at 8 o'clock, instead of 7:30, as heretofore.

St. James' cathedral in Vancouver is tastefully decorated for the beautiful month of Mary. The evening devotions are conducted in an edifying manner and are well attended by the faithful.

The friends of the Rev. Father, particularly those in Victoria and vicinity, will be pleased to learn that he continues to improve slowly, under the kind and untiring care of the devoted sisters at St. Joseph's hospital, Vancouver.

During the last few weeks the Rt. Rev. Bishop Junger, has been visiting his flock in the missions adjacent to Vancouver. His lordship administered also the holy sacrament of confirmation to those presented to him by Rev. Father Poaps, who has been recently charged with the care of those missions.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

PINE STREET FERRY LANDING ORDINANCE VETOED AND LOST.

Ordinance for Sprinkling all Permanently Improved Streets Introduced—First Street Bridge Reported in a Dangerous Condition, Etc., Etc.

A special meeting of the city council was held last night, Mayor Thompson presiding. Councilmen Andrus, [illegible], Hewett, Nestor, [illegible], Raleigh and Stitt were present, and Kellogg and Weber absent.

[illegible]

The following message from the mayor was read:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, PORTLAND, May 25, 1881.

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Portland: Gentlemen—I herewith return to you ordinance No. [illegible], entitled "An ordinance to establish at the foot of Pine street a ferry landing at the foot of Pine street in the city of Portland," without my approval, for the following reasons, to-wit:

First. The common council has no right under the charter to establish ferry landings. Under the [illegible] subdivision [illegible] of section [illegible] of the charter power is given to the common council to build, construct and regulate landings at the foot of the streets terminating at the Willamette river. Subdivision 16 of section 18, gives to the common council the right "To regulate the location of wharves along the city front and the direction of [illegible] the Willamette river with the harbor lines thereof."

These two subdivisions of section 28 of the charter give the common council all the power that it can possibly exercise in the matter of [illegible] establishing ferry landings is beyond the power of the common council. In all [illegible] as the municipal corporation of the city of Portland, nothing can be done in the matter of legislation except what is specially authorized by the charter or what is necessary to [illegible] into execution what is authorized to be done by the common council.

Second. There has never been a street laid out and established over the property where it is proposed to establish this ferry landing.

"The Brady map," made in 1852, and which has been taken to be the map of the first survey of the city of Portland, shows that no street was laid out east of Front street on the line of Pine street, and it is certain that the owner of the land at the time that survey was made made no dedication of a street on the line of Pine street, east of Front street. The common council of the city of Portland, at its regular meeting held April 20, 1852, adopted the map known as the "Brady map" as the map showing the streets, blocks and public property. This map, as I have before said, does not show a street east of Front street on the line of Pine street. At a meeting of the common council held July 13, 1866, C. W. Burrage, at that time city surveyor, was directed to make a complete plan of all the streets, blocks and public property in the city. This was done by Mr. Burrage and the plat of the survey made by him was adopted by ordinance No. 619, approved Feb. 27, 1867. This map does show that a street was laid out [illegible] on the line of Pine street east of Front street to the Willamette river.

No action was ever taken, so far as I am able to find from the official papers on file, opening Pine street, and from all the information that I can obtain it has never been opened, but has remained in possession of the present owners ever since. No action was ever taken that I am able to find to open this street east of Front street. The city charter plainly points out the manner of opening, laying out and widening streets and alleys, and to appropriate private property therefor. Under an act of the legislative assembly of the state of Oregon, approved Dec. 19, 1865, entitled "An act authorizing the city of Portland to open, lay out and widen streets and alleys and to appropriate private property therefor." This act defines how the common council must proceed in the matter of laying out streets and alleys. Nothing appears to have been done in the matter of laying out Pine street in compliance with the requirements of this act. It was not dedicated by the owner of the land, and the common council has taken no legal steps to lay out and open this street east of Front street, and the property has been in undisputed possession of the owners of block 81 and the adjacent property north of said block since the first survey of the city.

This ordinance also authorized the owners of such ferryboat to make any improvement that may be necessary to perfect a good and sufficient landing. The common council in this matter proposes to delegate to the owners of such ferry a power that is not possessed by the common council. The common council cannot establish grade and improve streets without a notice being first published giving ten days' notice of such improvement or changes, establishment of grade, and then if two-thirds of the adjacent property remonstrate against the proposed improvement, grade or change of grade, it can not be done. In this matter the ordinance under consideration proposes to give the lessees or owners of the said ferryboat the right to improve said street, and consequently make such grade as will best suit their convenience without complying with any requirement whatever of the city charter.

Respectfully submitted

D. P. THOMPSON, Mayor.

The vote on "shall the ordinance pass notwithstanding the veto?" stood: Yeas—Andrus, [illegible], Hewett, Raleigh and Stitt. Nays—[illegible] and [illegible]. As it requires six votes to pass an ordinance over a veto, the ordinance was declared lost.

ON SHAKESPEARE'S CHAIR.

Only a wooden chair, yet has no royal throne
Held sceptered monarchs whose imperial sway
Possessed such power o'er hearts and minds of men;
For none but puppets [illegible] a pageant were,
That by the hand of time are swept away.
With this poet's power beyond the tomb lives on
And grows for evermore.

And in that chair
He traced these types of tender womanhood
That live engraved on heart and memory,
Each chord, the human heart's diapason
Was struck and answered to his master hand,
The statesman's eloquence, the jester's quip,
[illegible] of despair and life-long agony,
[illegible] all rising love's pure tender lones.

Then comes the warrior's march, the clash of arms,
The conqueror's shout, the ringing burst of victory,
Then wonderstruck, one feels time naught,
For all are our Shakespeare lives, and dimly
[illegible] can see him through the mist of years
Seated serenely there and calm, sweet, genial,
The immortal verse that held, that holds
A world entranced! his loathing captive still.

AN EVENING WITH COLUMBUS.

[F. A. Stokes in the May Wide Awake.]

Charlie Brooke is a hero-worshiper.

Among his heroes, Christopher Columbus most calls forth his heart's affection and his mind's admiration, and he is ever ready to take up cudgels in behalf of the great patriarch of the sea. With his blue eyes in a glow of wonder, he dilates upon the learning and the foresight of his hero, his perseverance and his manliness during the years of rebuffs previous to the one great voyage, his daring in setting out with a wretched equipment, to seek a region believed to be inhabited by dreadful monsters, and at whose limit, did he escape these foul and shapeless creatures, the sailor would be horribly launched into space, to fall no one knew where; and is scarcely checked by his father's wonted reference to unpleasant things in connection with Columbus; his use in warfare of blood-hounds, who tore the hapless islanders limb from limb, and his extortions of gold and cotton.

Still, in spite of his admiration for Columbus, and his pleasure from the histories of illustrious men, all of Charlie's reading is not historical in character. His imaginative disposition craves the romantic and the fanciful; he so enters into the spirit of these wild tales, that he often is half persuaded that they are or could be true; and he has other strange notions in his little head such as might startle you, could you but know them. He is a firm believer in ghosts, and has formed many theories upon the deepest subjects. At any rate, he is a boy of ideas; but he will very soon lose many of the outlandish ones among them, if he passes through but few experiences like one of recent occurrence.

His parents were in New York at the time, and Charlie and the servants were alone in the great, old house on W—street, in Hartford. He was sitting in the cosy room which he had been allowed to fit up as his own "den," reading, when there came a loud knocking upon the front door. Charlie thought it strange that whoever it was did not ring the bell; but he thought it his duty to see what might be the matter. So he cautiously went into the hall and opened the door. He was surprised to see standing there a man of commanding figure and fine face, with a beard trimmed into a pointed shape, and with quite long hair.

The stranger bowed. "Good evening, young sir. I request the honor of a brief conversation with you."

Charlie hesitated; but looking once again at the stranger, he replied, somewhat meditatively:

"Certainly, sir. Come in."

The door was closed, and the unknown conducted to the family sitting-room, and offered a chair. He seated himself and at once began to speak:

"Can I trust you, young sir, with something of a very delicate and confidential nature?"

"I think so," said Charlie, in wonder.

"Ah!" said the stranger; and then in a dramatic manner he asked, "Know you whom you behold?"

"No, I fear I don't," said Charlie, quite ill at ease.

"You see before you none other than the discoverer of your native land—Columbus."

"Great Christopher," gasped Charlie.

"Precisely," returned the stranger, calmly. "Great Christopher Columbus."

"But how—" began Charlie, in amazement.

"You shall learn all. A young gentleman of your wide reading must have heard of the Elixir of Life?"

Charlie nodded assent.

"When I returned from the most auspicious of my four great voyages, the first one, my old friend, the prior of La Rabida, paid me a visit, and told me a wonderful story. Near his convent had lived an alchemist who was known to have toiled for years in search of the philosopher's stone and the elixir. He was an avowed infidel; yet one dreary night there came from him a summons to the good prior, who obeyed it to find the man of research surrounded by his crucibles and his retorts—dying. He could scarcely speak; his lips were shrunken and parched as though suddenly blighted; but in a whisper he made known to the prior his conviction that he had discovered an Elixir of Life; also the fact that just at the moment of success his muscles had become shriveled and palsied so that he could neither touch nor taste the precious liquid. He motioned the prior to a curious glass vessel in which was a very small quantity of a deep red liquid, and bade him take this, charging him to give it to the man who should best serve God and Spain within a year from that time. Then, giving the prior certain instructions and asking his blessing, the old alchemist died.

"The year had passed when I returned to Spain, and the prior chose me as the man deserving of his gift. He gave to me, in turn, the instructions given him; to force myself to take the elixir when first I could heartily wish myself dead, and to take as many drops of it as I chose, and then to throw the rest away, knowing that for each drop taken I should lie a century in the grave; but, at the end of the time just measured, should become alive, and live forever such a man as I was in the prime of former life. Under any other circumstances the elixir was powerless.

"The day of disgrace so deep that I longed for death came when the wretched Bobadilla outraged me with chains; and I took three drops of my elixir and threw the rest away. The years rolled on, and finally I, as the Columbus of 1470, stole out from the cathedral of Havana, and, to omit further details, have since then, like the Wandering Jew—whom, by the way, I meet occasionally—drifted about the wide world. Enough of this! For the present, I am hungry; for hunger can pain, though not destroy me. Can you, you, sir, give me something to eat?"

Poor Charlie had never been so racked by contending emotions. In his mind fear, doubt and a sense of the impossibility of it all struggled with a longing for something wonderful to happen to him, and with a conviction of truth which the straightforward story of the man had given him, and with his own private beliefs in regard to the supernatural. All the while, too, he had been closely scanning the stranger; and it had steadily grown upon him that his visitor resembled exceedingly the costly Columbus upon the back of our five-dollar bill! To be sure, he looked younger, and was somewhat differently clad; but his story accounted for the former fact, and the latter was to be expected.

This decided Charlie. "So," he thought, "there is my hero, influenced in some strange way to come to one who so greatly reverences him."

He spoke at last in an awe-struck tone. "Yes, sir, you shall be refreshed," replying thus to the last question of Columbus.

He excused himself in his most respectful manner, and hastened to bid the servants prepare a lunch.

"And," said the young host and master of the house, "be sure and boil several eggs quite hard."

Soon he and Columbus were seated in the dining-room beside a well laid table; and the latter truly did show a wonderful appreciation of the good things before him for one who did not eat to live, and who, Charlie could not believe, lived to eat. He had, as we have said, decided that his guest was Columbus; but he had had the eggs boiled in order to use one of them in an experiment which, if successful, would put to flight any returning doubts. If this were indeed Columbus, he could surely stand an egg upon end for him, as he had for the jealous courtiers at Mendoza's banquet; and now, as the materials for his proposed experiment were rapidly disappearing, Columbus having devoured three of the four eggs, Charlie drove his courage to the point.

"Mr. Columbus," said he, "will you be so kind as to stand an egg upon end for me?"

"Certainly," returned Columbus, as he helped himself to the last one.

He wiped it carefully with his napkin, and placed it beside his plate; then, to Charlie's astonishment, this same Columbus wiped his knife upon the snowy cloth, and balanced it in in his hand for an instant. Now, taking the egg between the thumb and forefinger of his left hand, he waved his knife in air, and, with a rapid stroke, deftly cut off the point of the egg. This done, he triumphantly stood it up on the flat under-surface thus made and turned to his young host.

"You see this is a great improvement upon my egg trick of 1492. It is neater and more graceful and affords an opportunity of displaying considerable dexterity. But progress is the watchword of this century and, although it took much practice to acquire the skill necessary for my new method, I really have not the assurance to palm off the old one upon an indulgent public as something wonderful."

Here he was proceeding to dispose of this last egg in the same manner as he had the others, when there came a ringing at the door bell. A servant went to answer it. Meanwhile Charlie, astonished yet delighted by the result of his experiment, was preparing to put a number of questions to Columbus; but there arose a noise of voices in the hall and the door of the dining-room was pushed violently open as a very frightened girl rushed in.

"Please, Master Charlie, here's Dr. F—— from the 'sylum,' as says there's a escaped lunatic."

Just then a man's form appeared in the doorway. It was a very pleasant voice that spoke.

"Ah, yes—I thought we might find him here. Come, Columbus, I think we had better go home now."

"Yes," replied Columbus, and, as he rose from the table, his dignified and merciful visage not at all discomposed. He started for the hall himself, and quietly accompanied a man whom he found there out to the carriage which stood waiting.

Meantime the gentleman within introduced himself to Master Charlie as Dr. F——, of the "Retreat," and a friend of Mr. Brooke. He stated that this was one of his patients; a man of wealthy family and sane in every respect except in the belief that he was Christopher Columbus. He was, the doctor said, familiar with every known detail of Columbus' life and even studied to appear as much as possible like the pictures of him which are commonly seen; but they humored him in all this, and he was harmless, yet was ever trying to escape from the Retreat. Tonight he had succeeded, and they had traced him to the Brooke house, glad to find him in good hands.

"And I think," added Dr. F——, with a smile, which Charlie made a weak effort to return, "that I can explain his coming here. A short time ago your father paid me one of his frequent visits, and I told him of this patient, then recently placed under our care. He was interested at once, and asked to see poor Columbus; so we called upon him, and your father treated him with deference as I had directed, and also told him of a certain young man, a son of his, who fairly worshiped even the name of Columbus. With the oftentimes amazing subtlety of the insane, our friend has treasured up your father's remarks; and in making on inquiries concerning his disappearance I [illegible] I was led to come here by learning that he had in a quiet way asked a keeper, a few days since, where Dr. Brooke lived."

Here the doctor, evidently with a suspicion of the true state of affairs, smiled again and bade Charlie good night; and as he entered the carriage, Columbus leaned out of the door and spoke to Charlie:

"Good-night, young sir. Should you call at my temporary lodging, I might show you a variation of the egg trick!"

But Charlie rushed to his room, to close the door tightly, and try to smother his feelings in his pillow.

Meantime, sundry egg-shells were being removed from the dining-room table.

FARM MATTERS.

A Renovating System of Agriculture.

Every farmer should aim first to maintain the fertility of his land rather than to produce heavy crops. If the soil is taken care of, as it should be, the crops will not fail to come. With judicious management, any field may be cultivated from year to year, and instead of becoming impoverished improve in fertility every season. And this may be accomplished simply by husbanding the resources of the farm, except on certain kinds of lands, where the soil is almost destitute of humus or vegetable matter. The most important consideration for farmers, all over the country is, how they may introduce most advantageously a renovating system in the cultivation of their fields. The fertility of the soil is, in many respects, like the growth, or fattening of an animal. If the animal is running down it will require much care and good feeding to check the falling off, and to cause the system to lay up fat and flesh. So with a field that has once been productive. If the soil has become impoverished by bad management; by a long succession of exhausting crops; by removing every product of the field and returning nothing in the form of manure; by allowing noxious weeds to bear sway, and by plowing and cultivating after the skinning system, it will require about as many years to restore the desired productiveness of a field, as it takes to impoverish its fertility. Every cultivable field should receive a liberal dressing of manure, or be enriched by a coat of clover plowed under as often as once in every three or four years. He who aims to return to his fields a fair equivalent in fertilizing material for every crop removed, has already commenced a renovating system that will render impoverished land more fertile, and rich ground still more productive.

Currants.

American Garden

If there is anything living that possesses the Christian virtue of returning good for evil in a higher degree than the currant bush we should like to know its name. Neglected and despised in an out of the way corner, half smothered under a tumbled down garden wall, or on a rubbish heap where nothing else could grow, a few currant bushes are frequently tolerated and never thought of until the July sun makes our system long for cooling and refreshing fruit acids. It is then that we call to our mind the patient currant bushes and become eager to gather—without blushing—their bright clusters, as interest for the worthlessness of the spot we have suffered them to occupy. Perhaps the advent of the currant worm is only a blessing in disguise, sent to teach us more charity and wisdom, and to compel us to give our much abused bushes better treatment. Try for once to give the currants a better place in the garden and cultivate them like any other shrub or plant which you expect to bear fruit, and you will soon become convinced that it pays to give fair play to even a currant bush.

Educating Horses.

[The Horseshoer.]

Horses can be educated to the extent of their understanding, as children, and can be easily damaged or ruined by bad management. We believe that the difference found in horses as to vicious habits and reliability, comes much more from the different management of men than from variance or natural disposition in animals. Horses with high mettle are more easily educated than those of less or dull spirits, and are more susceptible to ill-training, and consequently may be made good or bad, according to the education they receive.

Horses with dull spirits are not by any means proof against bad management, for in them may be found the most provoking obstinacy, vicious habits of different characters that render them almost entirely worthless. Could the coming generations of horses in this country be kept from their days of colthood to the age of five years in the hands good, careful managers, there would be seen a vast difference in the general character of the noble animals.

If a colt is never allowed to get an advantage, it will never know that it possesses a power that man cannot control; and if made familiar with strange objects, it will not be skittish and nervous. If a horse is made accustomed from his early days to have objects hit him on his heels, back or hips, he will pay no attention to the giving of a harness, or a wagon running against him at an unexpected moment.

We once saw an aged lady driving a high-spirited horse attached to a carriage down a steep hill, with no hold-back straps upon the harness, and she assured us that there was no danger, for her son accustomed his horse to all kinds of usages and sights that commonly drive the animal into a frenzy of fear and excitement.

A gun can be fired from the back of a horse, an umbrella held over the head, a buffalo robe thrown over his neck, a railroad engine pass close by his heels bumped with sticks, and the animal take it all as a natural condition of things, if only taught by careful management that it will not be injured thereby. There is great need of improvement in this noble animal. Less beating wanted and more education.

Plowing Young Orchards.

[Country Gentleman.]

If there is one job on the farm which requires more patience and care than any other, I think that plowing a young orchard is that job. Limbs are broken, trunks are barked, and much more damage is done to roots than to any other portion of the tree. Incalculable damage may be done to roots by careless workmen in plowing deep close to the trees. Some successful orchardists use oxen in plowing their orchards. The advantage of using oxen is that they are very slow, and there are no whiffletrees to bark trees. The practice which I have this year followed is to plow as close to the trees as possible with two horses, and then finish with a single horse. By setting the plow to run to land, so that the horse can travel in the furrow, and using a short whiffletree, a very satisfactory job can be accomplished. With these precautionary measures, and ordinary care and patience, plowing an orchard becomes a matter of no great difficulty.

Health of Farm Stock.

[American Agriculturist.]

The spring is a critical season for farm animals, and every precaution should be taken against disease. If one will consult any standard work on "Diseases of Domestic Animals," he will find that the great source of trouble among farm stock is a lack of neatness about the stables, the poor quality of feed, water, etc.—in fact, that the diseases are due to the improper care of the animals. The breathing of fetid gases arising from filthy stables and decomposing manure heaps is alone enough to induce disorders of a serious nature; but add to this the drinking of water from barnyard wells that receive surface water at every rain, and so polluted as to have an easily recognized taste and odor, and it is a wonder that the animals live at all. Many of the disorders, distempers, fevers, etc., which visit the whole herd at times, can and be traced to the [illegible] as to the water and the stable.
